

Contributor Information

Alastair Crocket is a Principal Academic Staff Member, Centre for Health and Social Practice, The Waikato Institute of Technology, Hamilton.

Email: alastair.crocket@wintec.ac.nz

Nicola (Nikki) A. Hurst is a tutor of counselling at Wellington Institute of Technology and a recent graduate of Massey University's Master of Counselling programme. She is particularly interested in pluralistic work with children and families and hopes to complete the research outlined in the article in the near future. Email: Nikki.Hurst@weltec.ac.nz

Elmarie Kotzé is a Senior Lecturer in the Counsellor Education Programme, Faculty of Education, University of Waikato, Hamilton. Email: elmariek@waikato.ac.nz

Ruth McConnell is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Counselling at Laidlaw College, and works in private practice. She is particularly interested in attachment issues, especially with regard to working with depression, as well as helping students integrate spirituality, personal development, and professional practice. Email: rmcconnell@laidlaw.ac.nz

Paula Moneypenny is the School Guidance Counsellor at Te Aroha College, Te Aroha. Her counselling practice is mostly with high school students and their whānau/families. She is the recent recipient of the Fulbright-Meg Everton Professional Enhancement Award in Education. Email: pmoneypenny@tearohacollege.school.nz

Tracy Riley is an Associate Professor specialising in gifted and talented education in the Institute of Education at Massey University. She is passionate about ensuring equitable education outcomes for gifted and talented learners of all ages and her research explores provisions for these learners. Email: T.L.Riley@massey.ac.nz

Bridget Scott is the School Guidance Counsellor at Ellesmere College, Leeston, Canterbury. Email: bridget.scott@ellesmere.school.nz